Chester Children's Chorus

Table Grace

Father God, grant us the gift of true perspective and balance as we assess our world here from time to time. May we see not only the sordid wrong but the glowing right and good: not only the rebellion and lawlessness but, also, the creative, caring, achieving youth. Grant us perspective that we may not lose the Vision Splendid for our nation and world. Even so, accept our thanks for your unfailing care. Amen.
Rev. Dr. Frederick E. Christian

Last Week's Program:

Sean O'Donnell

by Rich Shimko

Drexel professor Sean O'Donnell gave a passionate argument for the impact of humans on global warming. Sean explained that the energy the earth's atmosphere receives from the sun is balanced by the energy that it re-radiates back out into space. When components of the atmosphere such as CO₂ block the re-radiation of heat, the temperature of the atmosphere rises. The amount of CO₂ has been rising since 1960. Climate scientist have done careful analyses of the possible sources of CO₂ and have clearly identified human burning of fossil fuel as the source.

In answer to the claims that climate change is a hoax perpetrated by scientist, Sean argued that scientist are very conservative, skeptical, and non-cooperative, and it would be impossible for them to get together to perpetrate a hoax.

In response to a question of whether it would be worth spending "trillions of dollars to fix global warming?", Sean pointed to the 120° temperature in Phoenix the other day as evidence of the impact global warming will have on us. (This being a reputable news organization, and not a purveyor of fake news, I did a fact check on the 120° claim. It is true that Phoenix's temperature was recently 120°. It should be noted that the record high for Phoenix is 122°.)

Rotarians wanted him to return to discuss what we can do about global warming.
